teon: without explanation, no teon: please read the link i provided sebseb: I think that's one of the issues with Ubuntu, now they try to do something that is just not really needed in that case, and some other distro will have much better support for that. However a lot of users in here will already have the acrobat reader or whatever in the other distro anyway, so no biggie. sebseb: what's a good link for info on what is needed? sebseb: that's specifically what the link says, sorry teon: so if you want to install a 32 bit package on a 64 bit system, it's generally easier to download a 32 bit version of the package, or use a PPA teon: and you've read the 2nd page of the link I gave you? nacc: I would read the link I gave him sebseb. sebseb: but I feel like this isn't what he was asking sebseb: also I feel like you're making unsupported statements based on some impression you have sebseb: I'm not clear on what you were saying nacc: This case is no biggie, as he can just go to a diff distro that does have support for that, or download the 32 bit version of that program sebseb: but you're making an unsupported statement in the form of "if they want to do X then that's what they need to do" when it doesn't seem like that's what he was asking nacc: Well I just said that, and thats exactly what that link says, so again I think I was on the right track with that sebseb: if he wants to install a 32 bit version of a specific package, that's what he needs to do 82157476af
